

SPARKS' PERSPECTIVE

Ron Sparks
Commissioner

Over the last few weeks, the Department of Agriculture and Industries has been sampling Vietnamese seafood products to test for the presence of fluoroquinolones as part of the stop sale ordered on August 12. Fluoroquinolones are commonly known antibiotics we have all heard of like cipro, baytril, and chloramphenical. They are intended to be used as a drug of last resort in humans and animals because of their powerful strength. Although the United States has banned their use in our food supply, many countries continue to use them in animals that are raised for food.

Why do some international fish companies continue to use these drugs? Because the drugs are being used by the fish industries to improve mortality rates and therefore it also improves their bottom line. But there are serious negative effects from using these strong antibiotics. Their use increases antibiotic resistance in the fish and shrimp, which can lead to other health risks. Antibiotics like chloramphenical have been linked to aplastic anemia and even death in humans after consumption. Here in Alabama, we know it is not necessary to use these banned drugs and risk our family's health to farm-raise healthy, high quality fish and shrimp.

Our efforts in the stop sale are intended to prevent any contaminated seafood from entering retail markets or restaurants. We have given notice to warehouses that they are to hold their Vietnamese imports for sample testing until further notice. A recall of products from retail markets and restaurants has not been issued, but could be if testing shows positive results. Since the stop sale began, the department has located approximately 200,000 pounds of Vietnamese seafood.

Be assured that testing is ongoing. We hope there are not any positive results. The department's Food Safety Division has been in contact with retail companies and the restaurant industry since the stop sale was issued. They have been advised to hold any product they may have until testing is complete and decisions will be based on the results found.

The discovery of fluoroquinolones in Vietnamese seafood imported into the Southeast emphasizes the importance of Country of Origin Labeling (COOL) required by the USDA for seafood in our grocery stores. These labels not only help consumers make choices whether to buy fresh local seafood or imported international seafood, they help our food safety inspectors locate potentially contaminated products quickly and easily.

The department takes the FDA's zero-tolerance policy for these antibiotics very seriously. We cannot trust that other countries are raising and

New A+ Campaign Begins

Commissioner Ron Sparks has announced that the Department of Agriculture and Industries has started its new "Alabama A+" campaign that will promote Alabama produce and value added products in grocery stores and farmers markets throughout the state. The new promotion showcases Alabama's farmers and the goods that they produce using visual displays and colorful "Product of Alabama" labels.

"When you go to the grocery store, look for the 'Product of Alabama' labels to find superior quality and taste in products grown or produced here in Alabama," said Sparks. "We want to make sure that consumers are aware that they can get home grown specialty products at a reasonable cost right in their local grocery store or curb market."

The value of Alabama agriculture is not limited to a few commodities, but offers a wealth of specialty crops produced across the state. All 67 counties have relied, to some extent, on farming and ranching as an important component of the local economy. Alabama grown products can now be found all over the globe.

said, "We are pleased to partner with the Commissioner in this program. We as Alabamians should promote Alabama products and companies. It's the right thing to do."

"Locally grown and produced products such as fruits, vegetables and meats are the consumers' best value because of the freshness, price and superior quality," said Charles McDonald, President of the Alabama Retail Association, representing more than 4,000 Alabama retailers. "We are proud of Alabama's farmers who bring us these marvelous products."

Specialty crops include fruits, vegetables, greenhouse goods, Christmas trees, sod, nuts and other items such as satsumas, a tasty mandarin orange produced in the southern sections of Alabama.

preparing their food at the same high standards that we ask of our Alabama farmers. If the FDA has a zero-tolerance in place on a drug, then that means zero-tolerance. ## Commissioner Sparks visits West Africa

On August 22, Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries Ron Sparks held a press conference to discuss the first official visit from an Alabama delegation to West Africa to explore trade possibilities. Joining Sparks were Senator Hank Sanders and Mayor James Perkins both of Selma, and Mayor Johnny Ford of Tuskegee. "Our visit to Benin and Ghana was to find new opportunities for trade that fit both Alabama and the West African region," said Sparks. "Alabama can provide assistance in building the infrastructure they so greatly need. We have products like used farming equipment and poultry that could not only help feed people directly, but teach the people how to farm and feed themselves."

The delegation from Alabama traveled to West Africa to participate in the first Alabama-Benin Economic Trade Forum along with the World Conference of Mayors. While there they were also able to visit Ghana to explore sales opportunities in similar markets. "I want to commend Commissioner Sparks for having the vision and the courage to participate in this trade mission," stated Senator Hank Sanders. "This trip went a long way to creating trade and I believe there will be great trade between Alabama and Benin as a result." Mayor James Perkins pointed out that many people thought that trade missions to Korea were in vain until Selma got the tier one suppliers for Hyundai. "Understanding a culture allows you to do business better," said Perkins.

While in West Africa, Sparks and the delegation were able to spend time with Benin's Minister of Agriculture Fatiou V. Akplogan. "This was a great experience to tour the country of Benin with the Minister of Agriculture," said Sparks. "He was able to explain to us the importance of agriculture in his country such as the palm plants they grow for palm oil and where they grow cashews. We also were able to visit the docks and poultry importers at the port in Accra, Ghana. This mission helped me and our delegation have a better understanding of the needs of Benin and Ghana and how Alabama can help and benefit from a trade relationship." Members of the delegation were also able to meet with the President of Benin, Mathieu Kerekou to discuss trade possibilities.

Sparks, Sanders, Perkins, and Ford all agree they are interested in developing more Free Trade Zones similar to the one in Tuskegee. "Because of the Free Trade Zone, Tuskegee is able to compete and bring in jobs," said Ford. "We have a letter of interest to build a cashew plant in Tuskegee given to us by those in Benin. Cashews could be directly sent to the U. S. instead of through India. This is an example of one of the tangible projects we were able to develop on this mission. We did not simply want to come back with dreams, but with one or two concrete goals, and that is what we did."

Alabama Farmers Federation Provides Funding to Renovate Barns

The horse barns at Garrett Coliseum recently received a much needed renovation thanks to a $60,000 donation from the Alabama Farmers Federation. A total of 13 barns are still in desperate need of restoration.

Agribusinesses or any agricultural organizations are encouraged to participate in this renovation project. For more information about participating in the barn renovation project, please contact Doug Rigney at 334/240-7100 or Dana Wallace at 334/240-7205 or call the department's toll-free number 1-800-642-7761.

The Department of Agriculture and Industries' Poultry Programs Director Ray Hilburn received the National Agricultural Alumni Development Association's 2005 Volunteer Service Award. He was presented the award during the NAADA national convention held at Iowa State University. This award is given to individuals who have given freely of their time to further the goals of their institution, have demonstrated the ability to lead and organize and have demonstrated the desire to inspire and encourage others to support the institution. Hilburn is the third Auburn alumnus to receive this prestigious award, following in the steps of the department's Deputy Commissioner Doug Rigney and the late John Spence.

Hilburn an employee with the department for over 23 years said, "I am very humbled, very surprised," of receiving the award. "I don't think of what I do as outstanding. I just do what I enjoy."

Commissioner Ron Sparks stated, "One of the things I was so pleased to discover after I was elected Commissioner of Agriculture was the number of valuable employees, like Ray, that work here." He continued, "Ray is one of those people that knows his job and does it to the best of his ability, always giving 110%. We are so fortunate to have him on our staff."

The Department of Agriculture and Industries is a better place because of the influence of people like Ray Hilburn.
